

I am opposed to any FCC regulation that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Before we signed up for the Indiana protection, we received up to as many as 10-12 calls per day, many while we were trying to eat supper or while trying to relax after the long day. The change after being placed on INdiana's list was dramatic. We now receive more like an average of 1-2 calls per week, often going for more than a week without a single call. I feel like my time has been returned to me. When I was still receiving calls, I got where I would not answer any call that did not list a caller name on my caller ID. This meant I occasionally missed calls that I would have preferred to receive. If you lessen the effect of the present law in the state of Indiana I could only hope that all who are involved suffer the same plague of calls as those of us who have expressed the desire to eliminate unwanted solicitation calls.
